Sparkling Vitality Of Her Presence

Chemist

Supporter of School Activities

Behind a bubbling flask or decorating for a prom, the sparkling vitality of her presence, making waves, is felt. Her forceful personality is the source of her contagious buoyance. Her example is generosity with her time and ideas, but above all, with her enthusiasm. We gratefully dedicate the 1972 Milestone to a woman of spirit who will always make waves, Miss Angela Trovato.

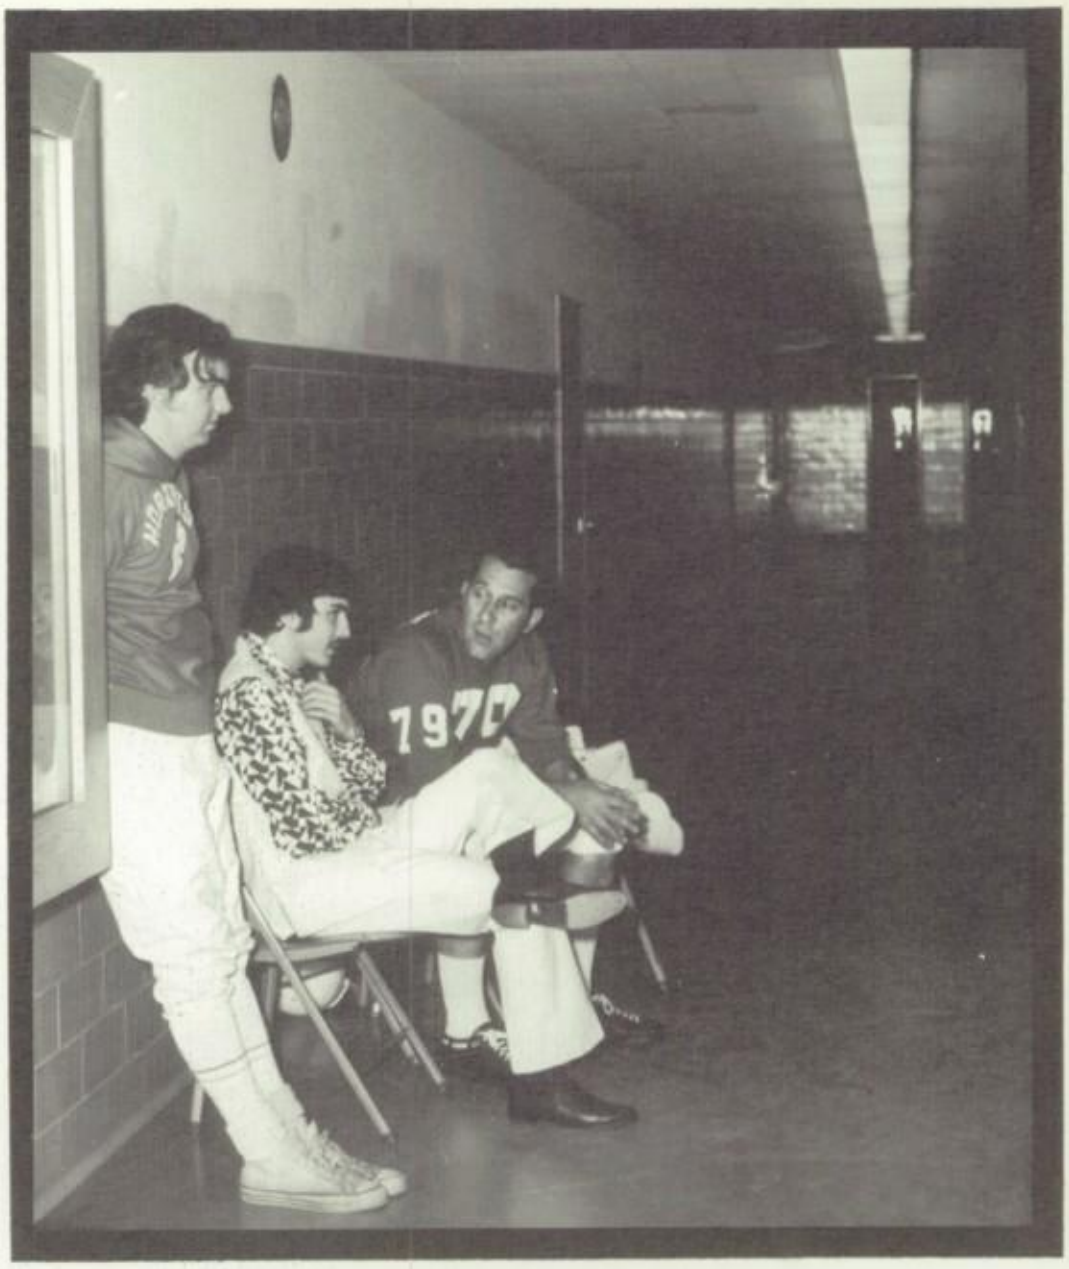
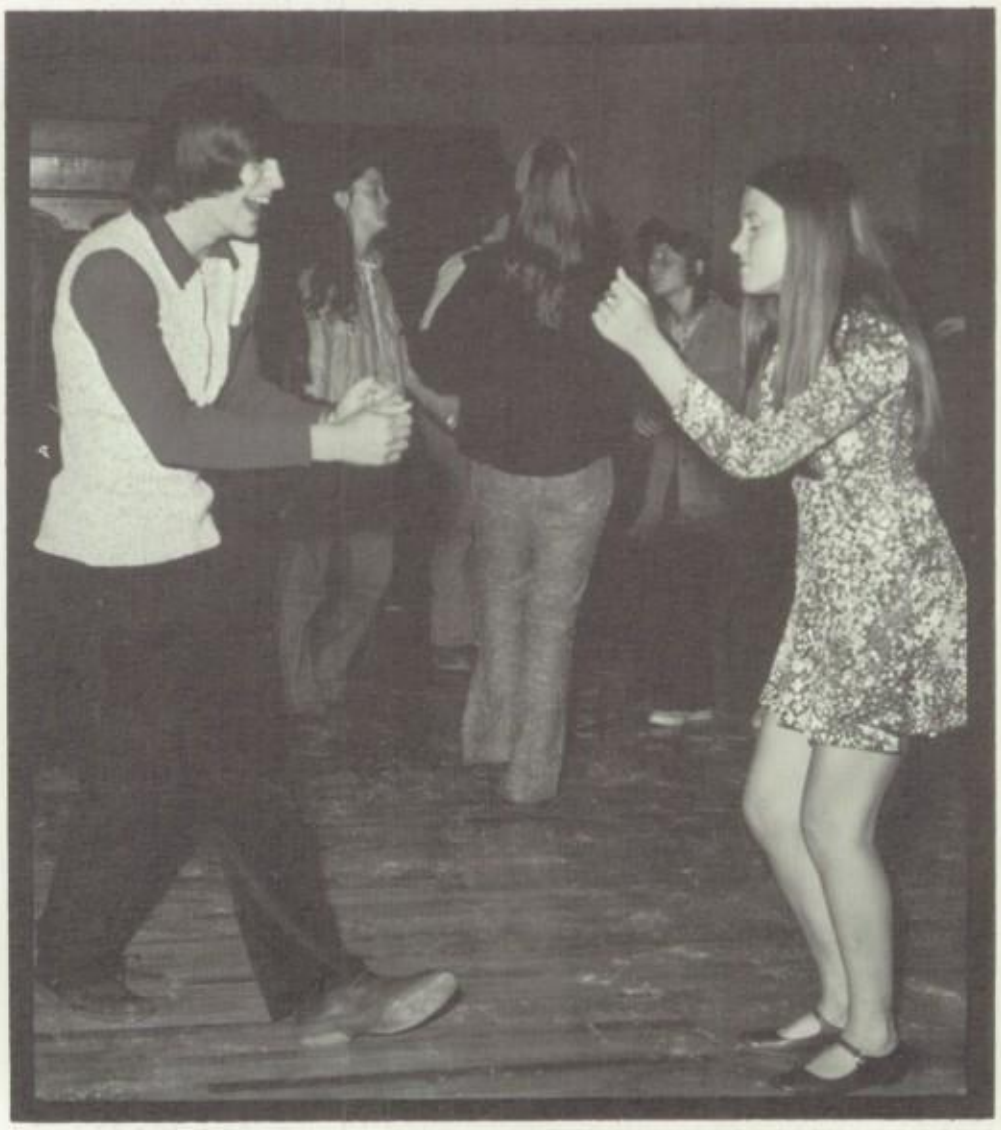
Making Waves

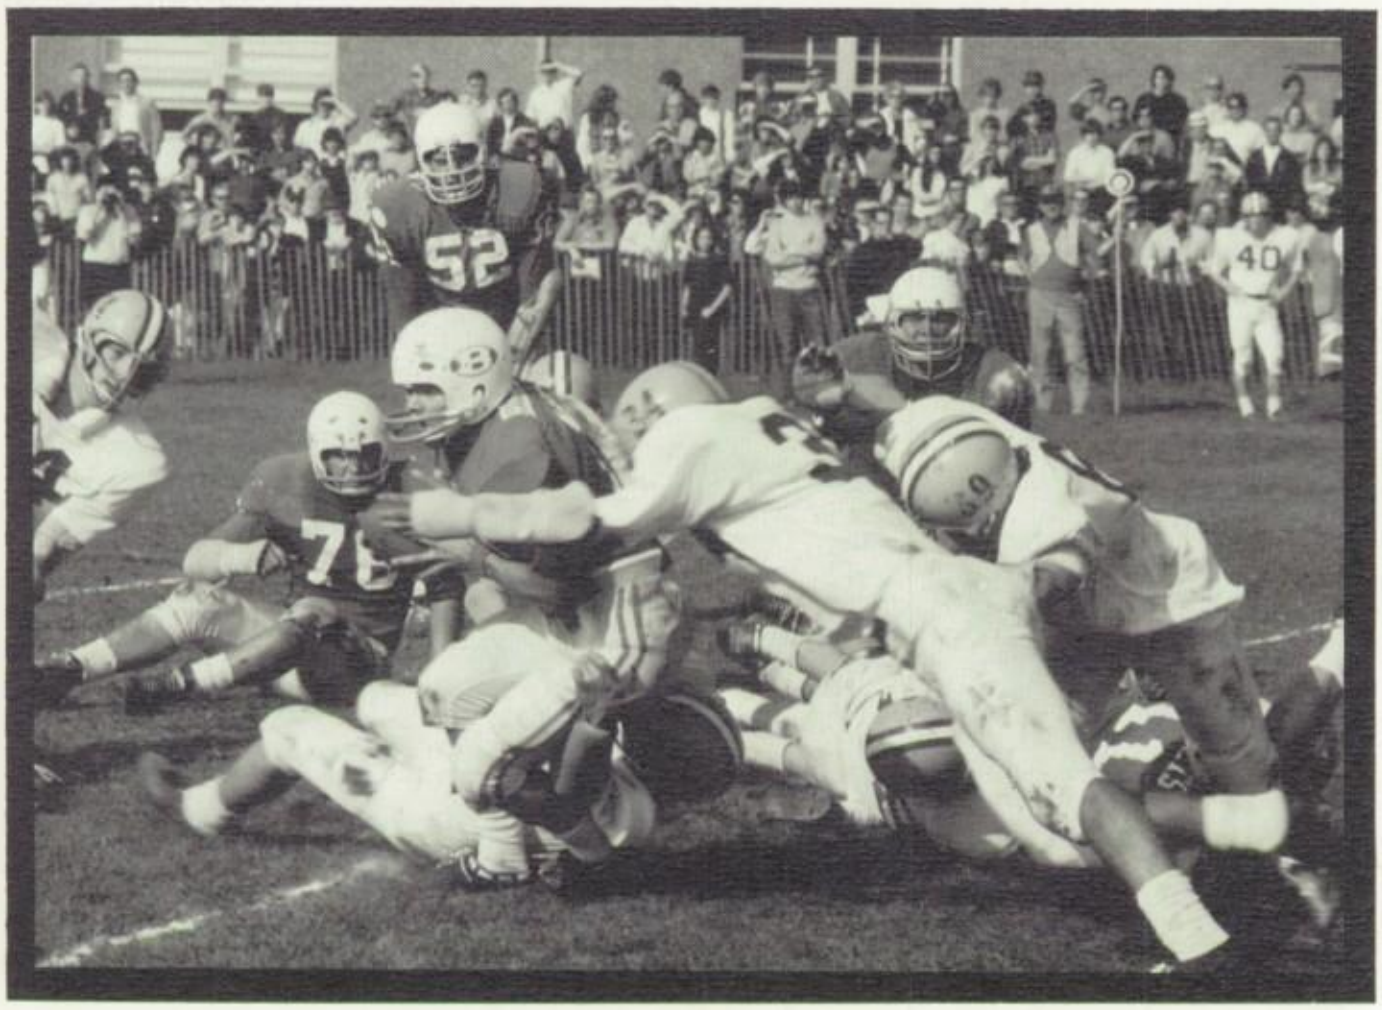


On a calm day, a pool of water is still until the wind, a swooping bird or a stray pebble penetrates its surface, forming waves. Like the pond, our school is motionless, even stagnant, until we make waves.



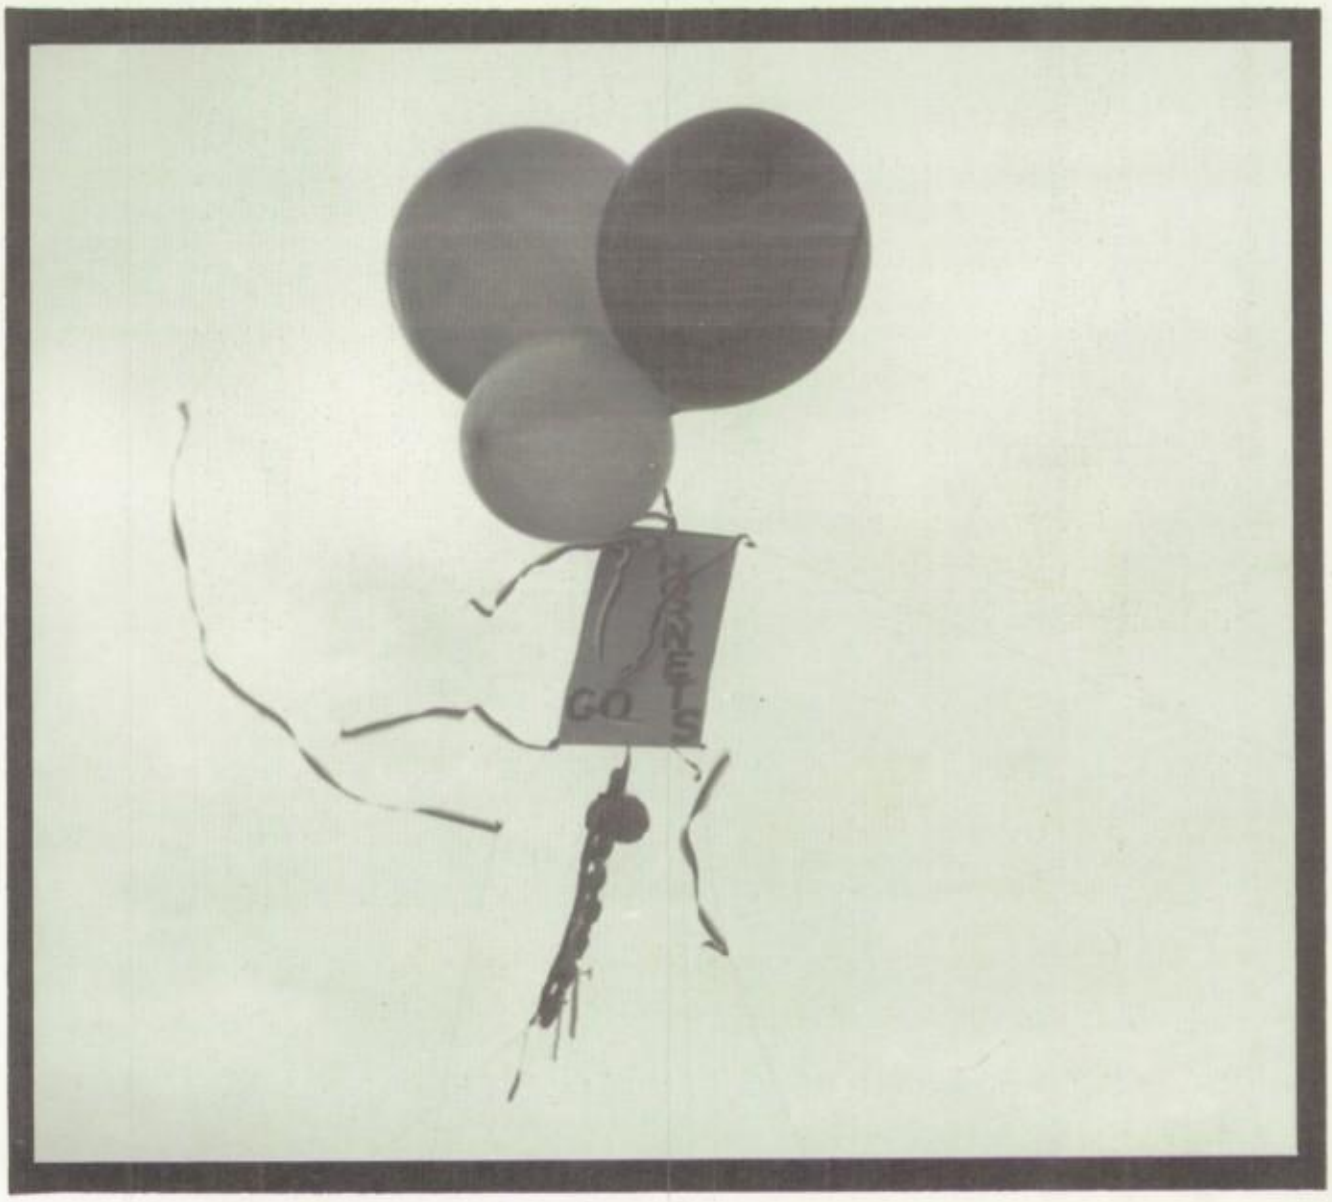
Waves signify involvement, change, and new experiences. They begin with one person's initiative, but trigger an outward expansion that influences countless others in an infinite progression.

Waves affect each person as differently as they would a mammoth whale and a minute minnow. The volume and propensity of each wave is as unique as the personality that formed it and the personalities it will help form.



Waves are the essence of an innovative school. Our waves can strike with the virulent destructiveness of a tidal wave or create with the dynamic benevolence of a sheltered cove.

Our waves can provide trust, cooperation, vitality, friendship and a constant source of inspiration.



The boundless enthusiasm of undergraduates is the motivation behind the sustained effort which they contribute to whatever is of moment to them. The waves made by undergraduates grow from tenuous ripples to powerful undulations as they learn to channel their forces effectively.

Undergraduates

The CLASS OF 1975

Adrift in a sea of unfamiliar faces, freshmen begin their four years of high school. Attempting to decipher a new schedule consisting of columns of letters and numbers is the initial obstacle to overcome. Baffled by a new concept of education, modular scheduling, freshmen cautiously venture into new classrooms. Walking down the corridors one can see freshmen in their assigned studies either lost in a book or staring out the window wrapped in a daydream. Class officers are elected, preparations for the dance test new skills, and clubs and sports benefit from the enthusiasm of new members. Finally, as the crucial year of adjustment ends, the Class of 1975 rises to the status of self-assured sopohomores.

A world of volvoxes, paramecia and amoebas envelope Thomas Shanley.

The CLASS OF 1974 Optimistically

"Hand in hand, together we'll walk through the threshold of a dream." The motto of the class of 1974 exemplifies their involvement in every aspect of school life. Sports events find them cheering in support of our teams. The social highlight of their year, the long-anticipated Sophomore Dance, provides memorable as well as profitable experiences. Biology is a formidable memory and formaldehyde becomes a recognizable scent. Through confidence gained as underclassmen, they await the exciting experiences of upperclassmen.

Scrutinizing the tape measure to determine her starting point, Deborah McIver premeditates the long jump.

Juniors enter their third year with their school rings sparkling in the bright light. Many will step into positions of leadership or run fifty yards for a spectacular touchdown or sink a basket for the varsity team. An arduous morning in April finds many juniors tensely working through SAT's as the pressures of choosing a college begin. Others face the difficult decision of an immediate career. Expressing Leadership Twisting and turning, trying to get comfortable Secretary Melinda Stanton proofreads the minutes.

A gavel pounds and the buzz of conversation subsides as a workable compromise is proposed, reuniting the Student Council. A barrage of committee reports hits the members' ears as an attempt is made to shorten meetings by funnelling work through smaller, more efficient committees. At the crowded and chaotic refreshment stand at football games, behind the busy voting tables, that voice over the announcements, addressing the Board of Education to improve Gerlach's parking lot, meeting with the administration: these are some of the ways and occasions the role of an active Student Council pervades both the school and the town.

Adorning Susan Pardee in a fashion known only to the stage are the make-up crew.

for Theatrical Magic

The pressure-role of prompter has its delightful moments known only too well by Suzanne Yankura.

Property crewman Jeanne Church adds the behind-the-scenes luster.

Work-clad members scurry left and right as last-minute preparations are made on make-up, costumes and scenery. Working long, tedious hours, each committee functions to present the club's two major productions of the year. Assisted by Mrs. Susan Buchanan, stage crews help to create mood and atmosphere with the aid of various lighting techniques and props. Essential cues, lines, entrances and exits are memorized as each talented actor anxiously awaits his cue as the curtain rises.

Slashing Air; Practicing a Butterfly

A row of clandestine grace, berets and all, envelopes a sideline during halftime of the East Haven encounter.

"Parry Left, Parry Right!" Two marked bodies of Fencing Club members travel aggressively towards each other, weapons slashing the air.

Competing in regional meets, the Girls' Swim Club practices butterfly, free style and back strokes for competition and fun.

The fund raising Winter Festival created activities and a sense of involvement.

Quick reflex and return thrust develops Geraldine Anastasio as a swordsman.

Nervously awaiting her turn, a soloist hopes her voice will be clear. In flowing robes, the Mixed Choir sings the well-known "Hallelujah Chorus" as the concert audience rises. The Girls' Choir sends out melodious vibrations with their three-part harmony. Later, the Boys' Choir adds a little bass color to the program. Under the direction of Ruth Frischkorn, voices rise through the crowded auditorium, producing harmony within their listeners.

With family cords as much in tune as musical chords, Michael Roth accompanies his sisters, Kathleen and Christine (alias "Roth Bros., Inc.").

Traversing the Winter Whiteness

Shimmering snow-capped hills and the cold, crisp air of a winter morning beckon skiing enthusiasts to conquer the unknown. Gracefully, skiers traverse the wild winter whiteness of a Killington slope, while others, more experienced in the sport, travel the more challenging routes. To enjoy the benefits of skiing, club members work diligently all year to raise funds by selling home-made goods at bake sales, peddling candy bars and selling potato chips during free mods. Under the advice of Mr. Howard McMackin, the ski club anticipates two exciting ski trips annually.

Never swallowing defeat at the hands of the glacial world, Justine Stopka snubs the snow.

Nervous, tense and with a butterfly stomach describes the student aide when the teacher in charge exits, taking that giant step out the door, leaving the aide "captain of the ship". Taking over the varied responsibilities of any elementary class for the first time is quite a task. It is also a unique and memorable experience for all. Aides receive impromptu courses in anything from refereeing fights and stopping bloody noses to mending broken hearts. At this stage in life, every insignificant problem becomes a violent crisis to the elementary school student. With the help of Miss Ruth Frischkorn, students have an opportunity to prepare for a future career in education.

Helping themselves to a delectable selection of appetizing dishes are Patricia Charlotte and Louise Dooley.

Overwhelmed with gratitude, Mrs. Hallden, elementary supervisor, accepts a gift from Miss Frischkorn.

Peeking into the Band Room, one sees the chaos of putting overlays on and tuning up. Members are forever searching for lost music sheets and braids. Some of the familiar sights of a parade are the gleaming arms of the trombones and white tubas, and the blurred motion of the drumsticks. The band and Mr. Thomas Greig conclude the year with a sense of accomplishment after spicing up concerts, parades and pep rallies.

Silvery batons flash in the sunlight as the majorettes march out onto the football field during halftime. The nervousness subsides as they begin their routine of intricate twirls and kicks to the lively and peppy beat of the school band. Hours of grueling practice are rewarded each week by the applause of the Branford fans. With the help and advice of Mr. James MacVeigh, the majorettes are a vital asset to school and town spirit throughout the year at football games, pep rallies and parades.

Dulcet melodies sail fleetingly into the air as flutists Alan Grossman and Fredann Barron collaborate their talents.

Sharing the All of Producing

Spending a weekend at a yearbook convention at Columbia University, visiting the publishing house to browse through their library of yearbooks and working under the careful guidance of their experienced advisor, Mrs. Luci Patch, are many of the ways by which the MILESTONE staff learns how to put together a good yearbook. As a family is held together by a bond of love, the MILESTONE staff is held together by a bond of dedication; a dedication to producing an exceptional yearbook. Together they share the excitement and anticipation, the endless tasks and decisions and, of course, the disappointments. Together they share the memories; memories of piles of copy to be read, approved and typed; memories of towers of pictures to be identified; memories of dozens of MILESTONE homeroom representatives scurrying to and fro, collecting money for book orders; memories of innumerable mods of picture taking, weekly bake sales, and pressing deadlines; and memories of the kinship they found in sharing the all of producing the 1972 MILESTONE.

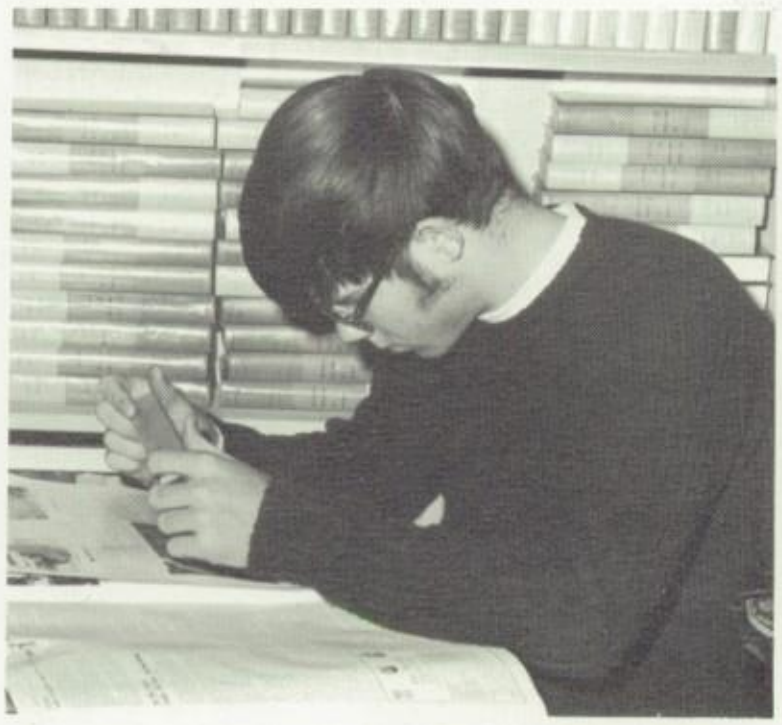
Heard the latest? Barometer gets the facts but how about the gossip? Striving to meet printing deadlines, Barometer editors scan copy and seek reporters for desperately-needed copy. Reporters in turn phone both school and town gossips and relay news back to busy editors. Pica counts, endless typing, layout calculations, proofreading, are all very much a part of Barometer. Editors heave a sigh of relief as each issue is shipped back from the printers, ready for distribution. Measuring school pressure, the Barometer informs and entertains both students and faculty with news, features, sports, photography, editorials, and student polls.

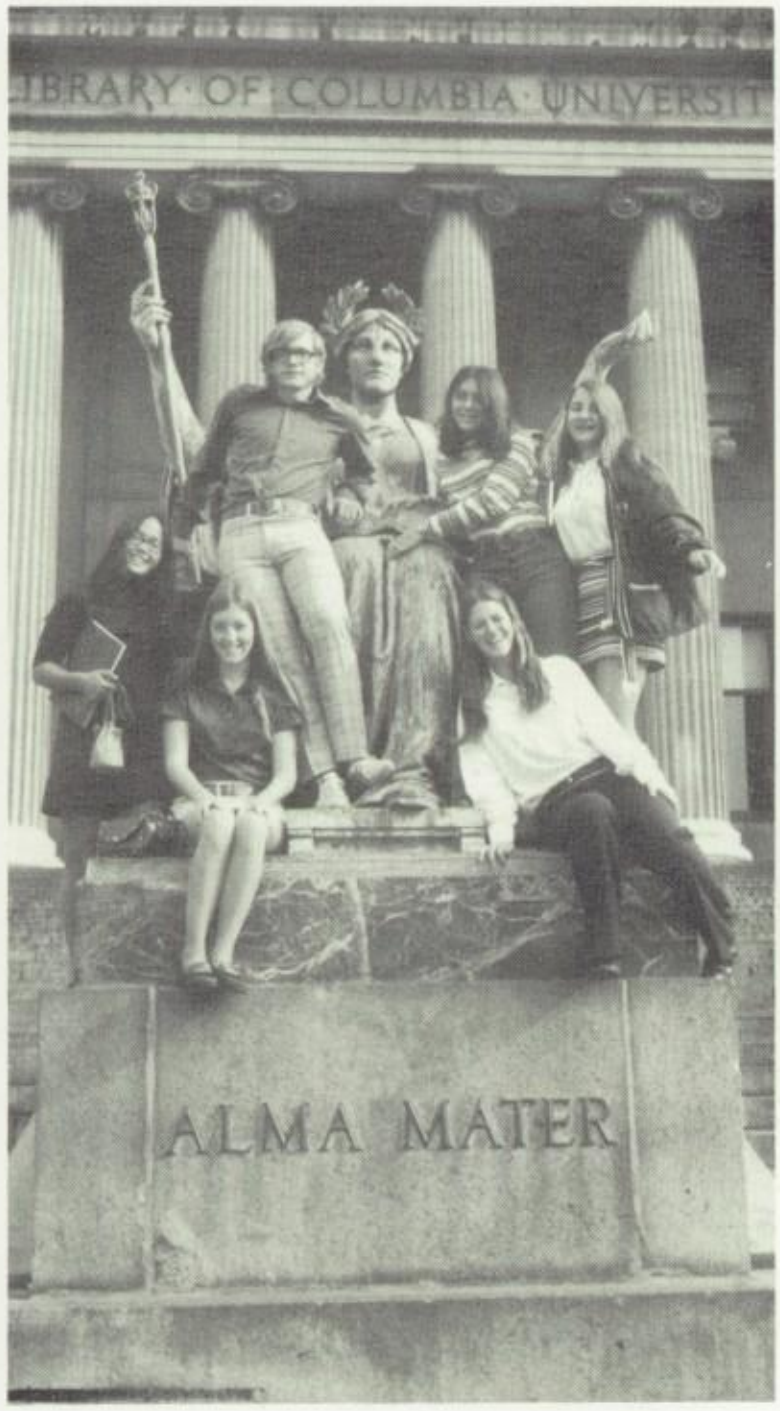
Bright silk-screened covers, plenty of mimeographed copy, stimulating essays, short dramas, traditional prose, poetry and varied artwork. These make up the creative contents of the high school literary magazine, REVERBERATIONS. Striving to express student creativity, the magazine is published annually by the student body. Material circulates through the editorial board headed by Mr. Salvatore Pettinato, advisor. All students are encouraged to submit material on any subject as REVERBERATIONS depends entirely on the talents, tastes and responses of the student body.

Terror fills the eyes of Mrs. Donna Christian as Mr. James MacVeigh rides her on a bicycle that was not built for two.

Expressing Student Creativity



Ruler in hand, Arthur Knapp uses an old HORNET as a reference in setting up its more relevant offspring, the BAROMETER.



MILESTONE Staff members brave the height of Columbia University's Alma Mater to nestle securely in her protective arms.

Nervous excitement fills the air as the moment for the induction ceremony to begin draws near. Long flowing maroon robes, adorned with the blue and gold National Honor Society emblem, add dignity to this honorary occasion. In the darkened auditorium the mood is solemn as eyes are focussed on the flames of character, leadership, scholarship, and service that flicker and waver as they never do within the hearts of the society's members. Pride permeates the auditorium and overflows into the library where it is expressed in the words and embraces of family and friends between sips of coffee and bites of delicate cookies.

In a twinkling moment of intense delight, former advisor, Mrs. Mary Daly beams her sincere congratulations to Judith Kessen.

After the induction, Aletta Frink shares her feelings in a frenzy of emotion with her parents.

Contributing Knowledge by Students

Extending his knowledge of the A.V. department, Eric Piera is informed by Mr. Hippolitus of a projector's technical aspects.

They are volunteer students who are willing to use their free time in lending a helping hand in our vast yet explorable storehouse of knowledge. Around every corner there awaits a new dimension of learning to be investigated by the students. The aides' duties vary from dusting thick unused books of knowledge to assisting a fellow student to locate a desired book Librarians, Mrs. Shirley Murphy and Mrs. Carol Moss enjoy the benefit of the extended hands of the library aides.

Behind every movie projector there is always someone to operate it. Just call Mr. Edward Hippolitus' room and someone will come to repair a damaged film projector or replace a burned-out bulb in the overhead. The most complicated-looking projector waits to be tackled by one of the audio-visual aides. You can always know when a piece of equipment is in good working order by its monotonous hum or well-known whine signifying the A.V.'s skillful maintenance.

Work becomes a meaningful progression instead of a necessary evil for the DWE student. School develops relevance to business, trades and careers. Participation in the more real, and often more difficult, world outside of school expands the DWE student's potential as he shuttles between school and job. With the guidance of Mr. Edward Hippolitus, school and the workday world blend into a practical, yet stimulating, whole.

Different media of instruction combine to form DECA. It readily exposes an exciting world of opportunities in marketing, merchandising and sales promotion. DECA students are constantly on the move to create an advanced learning atmosphere for their ever-expanding club. One way in which they successfully put theory into practice is through their efficient operation of the Hornet's Nest. Here, under the guidance of advisor Joseph Martin, the promising DECA students meet the necessary challenges for a solid background in self-assured salesmanship.

Guest speakers deliver stimulating previews of the members' futures. Whether it concerns proper work dress, job interviews or business administration, much new information is utilized by all. Ambitious members anticipate the eventful state convention in the spring for the competitions like public speaking or the presentation of a sales pitch. Advisors Marie Cullen and Phillip Delise aid these industrious business students in preparation for their next major step into the demanding business world.

Eager and determined students knee-deep in bottles and aluminum cans, struggle to find a possible exit, only to be stopped by a wall of newspapers. Muscles are pulled and backs feel broken as students unify their strength in the hope of sending the cargo off soon. Hard working members participate in recycling activities and, with the help of Mr. Peter Stolzman, concentrate on the environmental problems of our community.

SBE crusaders discovered this discarded row of gym lockers wallowing and rusting in the marsh behind the scenes of bright, bubbling Branford High School.

To create a wave, one must have an initial force. A dedicated and creative administration provides this moving force for students, inspiring waves of change and discovery in their lives.

These are concerned men; concerned with policy, concerned with forms, concerned with discipline, and emphatically concerned with the student and his education. They are open, friendly and cooperative but can come down heavy when necessary. They live under pressure in the midst of demanding student groups, worried parents and a divergent faculty. Their world is a microcosm of the world outside, containing everything from trivia to major crises. To deal with this world, they must be experienced diplomats, skilled strategists and top-notch public relations men. Above all, they must be what they are: innovative, aware and concerned educators.

In the midst of shrilly ringing telephones, clicking typewriters and the omnipresent public address system, dwell the office staff. Sounds of beginning language students echoing pronunciation drills fill the language lab and overflow into the hall. Verbs fly as teachers begin a rapid conjugation drill and the confused faces of students break into wide smiles as they finally conquer the verb. Language students find that foreign literature adds a new spark to their learning. French students are amused by Moliere and there is always "Le Petit Prince." Latin students puzzle over Cicero. Finally, team teaching in the more advanced courses makes learning fun. It thrills the students to discover that they can actually communicate in and understand a foreign language.

Adventurous folk legends to rip-roaring tales of the Old West to the great Greek myths are among the topics which add much variety to the numerous quarter-credit courses. Each student can learn the stories of King Arthur, the mysterious Sherlock Holmes or Shakespeare's Macbeth. Eastern philosophy, religious poetry and women in literature are among the exciting courses that stimulate class discussion. As students learn the techniques of applying make-up and building scenery, others enjoy shooting film in the latest Film-making course. What is the black experience? Chalk dust fills the air as students and teachers explore the maze of mathematics. Decimals, algebraic formulas and geometric designs are among the many obstacles they must overcome. Graphs and intriguing word problems tease their brains as wall upon wall is covered, not with graffiti, but with the calculations of excited minds. Long pencils become short as they are dulled and sharpened, only to be dulled again. Learning through experiencing is the key to scientific investigation. Motivated by the question, "Why?", science students struggle their way through clouds of gases and odors resulting from chemical reactions, layers of muscle tissue covering the internal organs of an animal and mountains of prepared slides capturing the tiniest of organisms for study with the magnifying aide of microscopes. Guided by theories of the world's greatest scientists, students explore the concepts of defraction, refraction, and reflection, of time and energy and of electricity. Forever moving onward under the persistant nagging of this all-powerful question, young scientists search out and find the answer to "Why?"

After another successful concert, all the practicing seems worthwhile.

Discovering Versatility and Raising his foil, Mr. Howard McMackin staidly eyes his opponent in anticipation of a formidable clashing of skills.

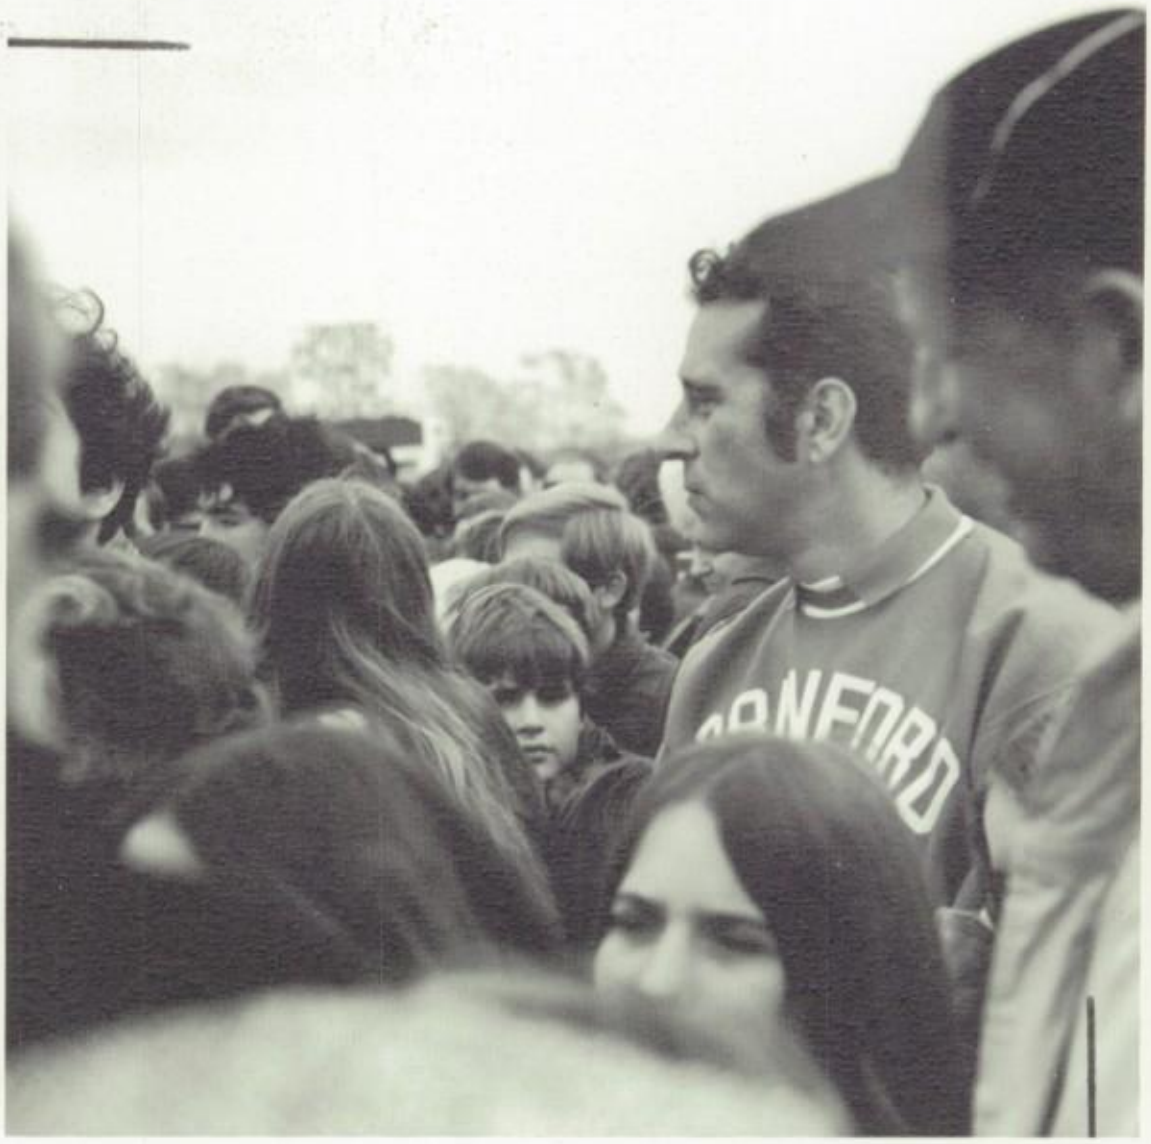
Meredith Bouley and Mr. Edward Hippolitus collaborate exuberantly to generate euphonius vibrations.

Striving to make herself understood, Miss Jean Merriam zestfully employs an ancient method of communication, sign language, to support her words.

With the roguishly serious attitude which makes him so easy to like and respect, Mr. Dominic Cote virtuously cleans up after some mother's child.

Variety Among Teachers

Outfitted in the flashy garments of a magician, "Tricky Nicky" Rinaldi stuns the audience with his arbegla presentation.



"Alone" in a crowd, Coach Joseph Farina's mind is searching in regions far removed from the disquietude surrounding him.

Friendliness and warmth radiate from the heart and smile of Parent-Volunteer Joy Crelin.

Heeding the advice of Miss Barbara Stapleton, master chefs John Caruso, Richard Bourne, and Ronald Washington recapture the freshness of the Garden of Eden in their fruit salad.

Maintaining the School

Hamburgers, potato chips, and corn are a popular hot lunch. Every Tuesday and Thursday, little cellophane packages of cookies, brownies and Ring-Dings are snatched up by ravenous students. A mountain of huge red apples or a basin of Sunkist oranges, along with numerous desserts or trayfuls of cold grinders, can be seen at the beginning of the lunch modules. Ladies clad in white work deftly to appease the students' insatiable appetites.

After school in an empty classroom, a lone custodian sweeps among long rows of desks. During classes, the hall floors are constantly being buffed. Coming back from Christmas vacation, one discovers a clean, shining cafeteria floor. Around and around the football field on a lazy spring day, one sees a man on a tractor-lawn mower.

Both the custodial and kitchen staffs are essential elements to the maintenance of the school.

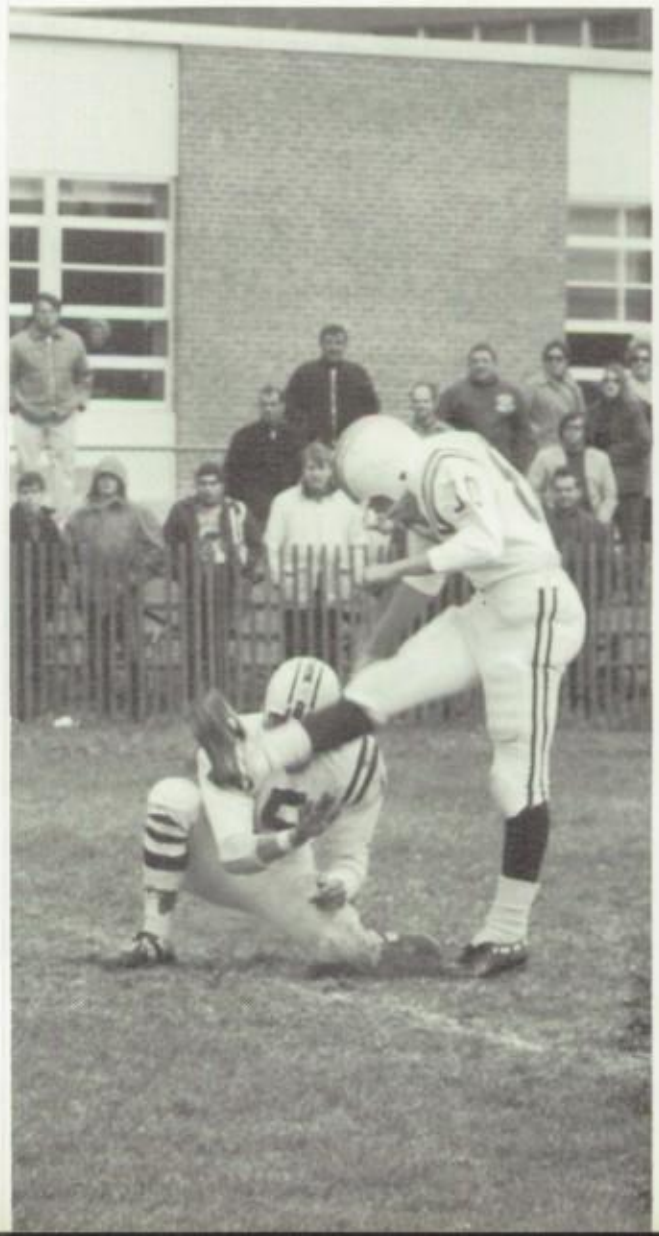
As confetti flys through the autumn air, the atmosphere of most football games is quite exuberant. A quarterback, dodging down the hazardous field to make that all-important touchdown, provokes the crowd to vibrant screams like, "We want a victory." With Coach Joseph Farina supplying expert advice from the sidelines, much action is seen on the field, like those bone-crushing tackles and brutal blocks. We can often see some open field running and a scoring jaunt, racking up those powerful points. Cowbells, horns, and munching on those half-time hot dogs, are all part of our cheerful Saturday mornings at a football game.



In a surging effort, quarterback James Pacileo heaves the ball, destination known only to the offense.

Zooming past the line after two and a half miles of rocky trails, Scott Nattinger spurts to the finish.

The team whips into shape and soon it's not unusual to cover eight miles a day. Hurdling trees, sliding down muddy slopes, running on rocky paths; each meet becomes a test in enduring the wilds. Coach Stanley Petela keeps an eye on the score as the team runners cross the finish line. With a brand new course and five returning lettermen, all the agonies and pain were well worth it, as proved by a winning season.

Wary of her opponents' moves, Susan Reed stands alert to any break in the offensive line.

Sticks clash, the ball flies, Carol Markesich lunges to claim control of the ball.

With new uniforms, the hockey team reluctantly leaves the locker room for hot practices and wind sprints or to meet an opponent. After the centers bully and the game starts, players execute hook passes, scoops and drives. With the skillful coaching of Miss Virginia Moessmang, the team excels each season. The cracking of sticks and the hard thumps of wood shattering on shinguards are noises that one frequently hears on the field while off the field other players cheer their teammates on to victory.

Skill and Coordination

Red and white striped jerseys, a green field and black and white balls decorate a soccer match. Everything and everyone is in fluid motion, from the players and the ball to the referees and the spectators. Soccer is a fast and intricate sport with corner kicks, offsides, scissor kicks, throw-ins and tackling. From the silence before the opening kick-off to whistles blowing and yells of encouragement to last minute instructions from Head Coach Paul Rowan, there is never a dull moment during the soccer season.

A forceful drive is prevented as Robert Brown steals the ball from the enemy's path.

"Get your man! Go for the ball! Wake up or I'll bounce the ball off your head!" Sweating hands and faces, a faster pace, minds sharpen, and the defense is set up. By quick planning the girls' basketball team engages in precise passing and teamwork. With each girl practicing her own position, the team becomes familiar with such things as stack offenses, bounce passes in a zone, jump balls, and fouls. The girls enjoy learning new skills as well as those golden victories. Under the assistance of Coach Virginia Moessmang, the teams look better every year, and at every challenge the team is better equipped for another win.

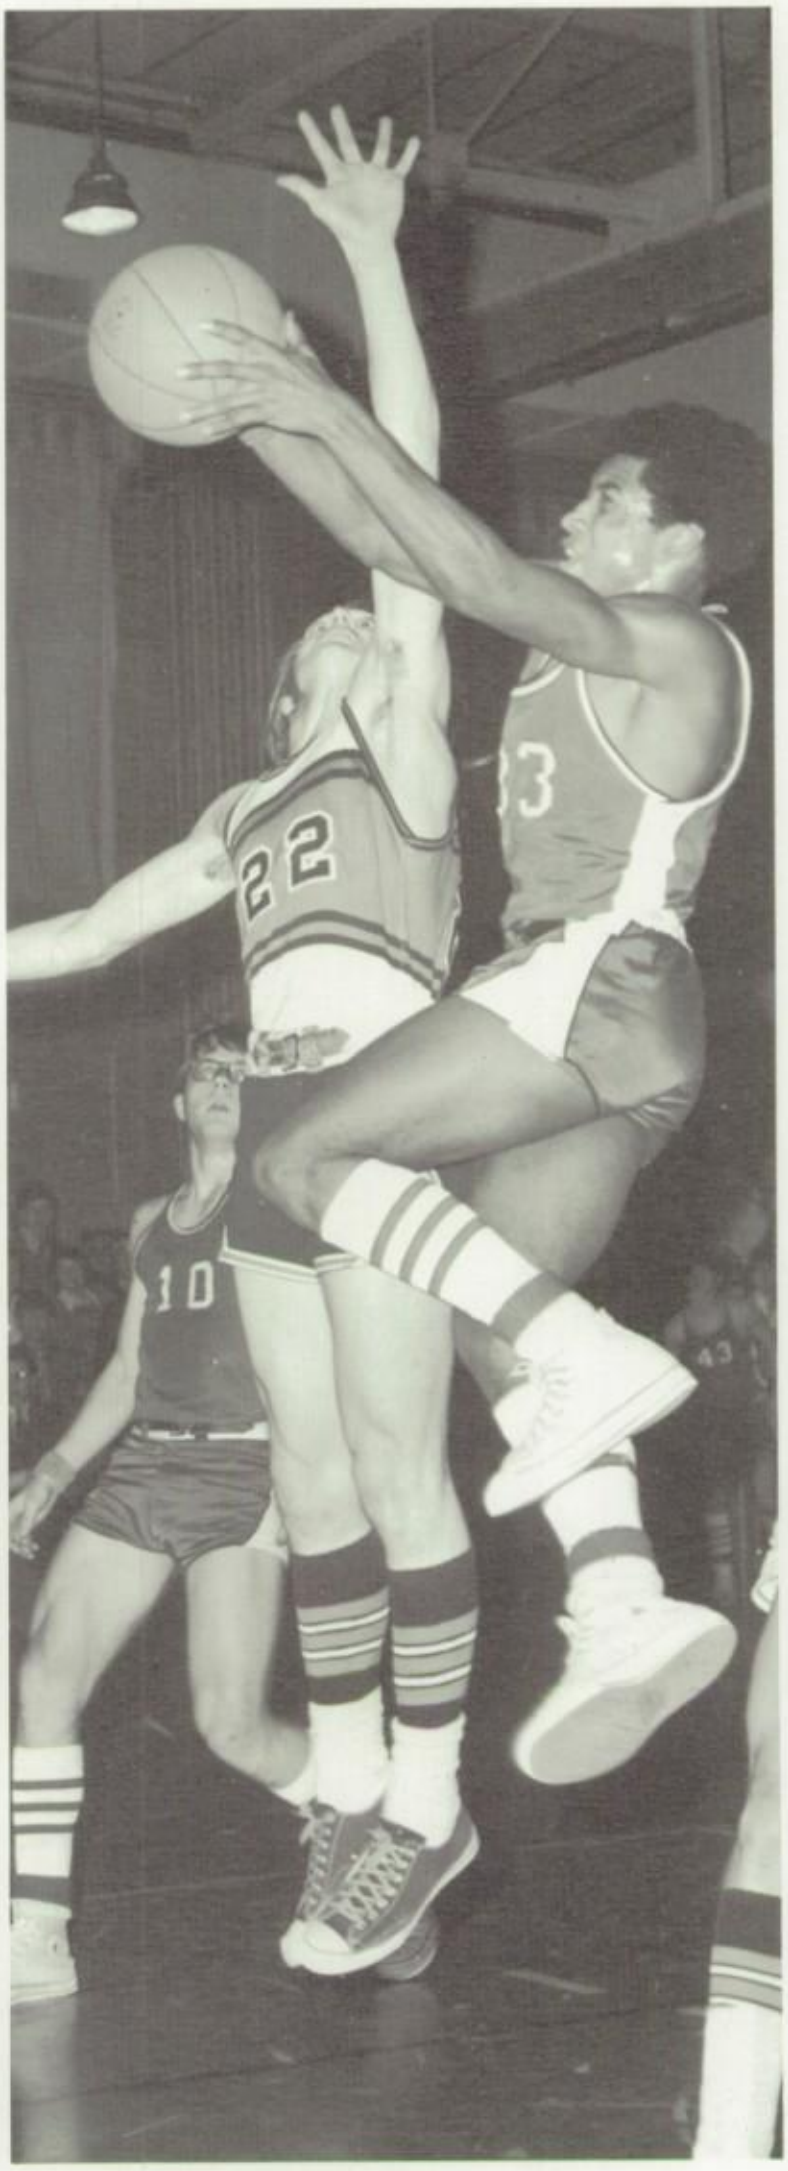
Flashing red uniforms, bodies beaded by perspiration and chests heaving from exertion are images of the HORNETS in their quest for victory at the hoops. Exuberant cheers resound against brick walls as the mighty "red machine" dribbles, shoots and rebounds its way to the Housatonic League championship. Shouted instructions bounce onto the court from Coach Thomas Murray, every fiber in his body alert to the needs of his team. Victorious chants of "We're Number One!" pound triumphantly against their ears as the team moves exhaustedly into the lockerroom, overcome by waves of relief.

A steal, and Arthur Knapp is off like a gazelle for a score.

Breaking Records – Sokolosky

Ripping through the grasp of a Red Raider, Wayne Cooke strains for a basket.

Stretching himself to the maximum capacity, Wayne Sokolosky loops the ball for the rim.



Swooping like an eagle in flight, Bernard Moncrief streaks toward the loop.

It's a bird! It's a plane! No, it's Super Mike Miller . . . about to make a big splash.

Loosening their muscles, the boys stride to the starting blocks. A tense quiet falls over the pool area as the starter says, "Judges and timers ready? Swimmers take your mark." The gun fires sharply. The silence is broken as Coach Warren Adams urges the swimmers on amid cheers from the fans. With sleek, smooth movements, each boy adds his individual style to each stroke and breathing method. For a change of pace, graceful divers perform their special dives with perfection. Vigorous effort and arduous practices result in these symmetrically athletic sights.

With the refreshingly cool water catching light rays beneath him, Peter Barret taxes his muscles to pick up an advantageous lead.

Loosening Up,

Spring blossoms. With it, the flowers begin budding, the trees begin to sprout and the baseball team's pitchers begin loosening up. Amidst the singing of busily building birds, one hears the umpire's shout of "play ball!", the resonant "crack" of a good, solid hit and the excited shouts of loyal teammates and fans who crowd the green bleachers. The baseball diamond is dotted with the dedicated boys who participate in and grow with the sport, under the guidance of Coach Robert Ellis.

Thoughts hovering on the purpose at hand, James Howard warms up.

Firing the seamed sphere across the plate, Thomas Bray challenges the batter.

The determined profile of first baseman Kenneth Santone is set to the task of preventing a base hit.

Soaring above the murky depths of the long jump pit is Deborah McGiver.

Soaring To New Heights/

Stretching to clear the last hurdle and outdistance his rival is John Mason.

After long, hard hours of painful team and individual practice, Coach David Johnson's team is ready to take on a foe. Powerful legs guide the sprinters past the finish line. The magnificent grace of the jumpers is evident as they soar to new heights and lengths. The ideals of Ancient Olympia are relived as the discus and javelin are thrown and the shot is put. The pain is unbearable as the runners strive to bring forth that final effort necessary to win the premier event of sport, the mile run. Despite his agony, the track athlete realizes that at the end of his race lies victory.

The tension of individual and group performance climbs toward its summit as a successful serve is executed. As the ball is volleyed back and forth across the high, black net, teammates aid each other to set up to be smashed into the opponents' weaknesses. The alerting screams radiating from the bench are projected by the clever, skillful Coach Toni Cartisano.

Driving Endlessly For Perfection

A free yet controlled swing is the paradoxical quest of both golfers and tennis players. Across the fairway, through yet another sand-trap, the small white ball is pursued with tenacity and unslacking desire for an eagle or a birdie putt. On the clay court, the serve is made and the return is completed causing the rapid beating of ball against racket that is the mark of the player's intense concentration. The tennis and golf teams continue the endless drive for perfection through practice that is a part of their demanding sports. With Stanley Petela at the helm of the duffers and Gerald Crotty running the tennis bums, a successful season is always possible.

GOLF TEAM

David Sharp, Kevin Castle, Mr. Stanley Petela, coach; John LaRhonde, Terrance McSherry, Charles Elrick, James Glynn, Scott Doolittle.

Waves Of Life Flow Toward Death, Leaving Endless Reverberations In Their Wake

SILENCED

I can't stand people who won't let me talk they ask me a question
but they don't care
for an answer
If I'm saying something they don't want to hear they begin abrupt and interrupt with a subject
that's not so dear

A poem by Joanne Lynch
October 26, 1954 - June 2, 1971

The shelves in Room 242 still groan beneath the weight of jumbled stacks of books, but their owner is missing. Barbara Barker's vibrant contralto voice and the staccato clicking of her high heels no longer resound through her room. With her beloved books and the echo of her husky voice, she leaves the memory of a woman who was deeply dedicated to teaching. When the elective English program was instituted, she said firmly, "I don't care what I am assigned to teach as long as they're not the same courses, quarter after quarter." Her range was tremendous, from American Literature to Business English; her particular love was the student who found reading difficult. Barbara Barker wanted a variety of courses to serve as a constant source of challenge. With shoulders hunched intently forward in her windbreaker, she coached the tennis team with the same zealous spirit with which she taught English. Pacing beside the court, she instilled with her shouted admonitions and steady encouragement a sense of sportsmanship to be prized above victory. She is remembered for her dedication, her encouragement and her inspiration. The most important thing about Barbara Barker was that she could receive the highest tribute anyone could give a teacher—she loved teaching, she was never afraid to change, to move forward to new and better techniques and courses, and she loved people. She was alive.

"The only gift is a portion of thyself."

The storybook world of Lothlorien envelops Scott Doolittle and Patricia Elrick as they share a hushed moment.

In the midst of the spring freshness of the land of Lorien rest Queen Wanda Burrier and her court: Andrew Levy, crown bearer; Thomas Bailey, Boys' Social Chairman; Julie Twyford, Queen's Attendant, Arthur Knapp, President; Evelyn Donadio, Queen's Attendant; Kenneth Carloni, Parliamentarian; Amy Twyford, flower bearer.

Sparkling In Enchantment, Lothlorien

What lies on the other side of the arched white bridge? A fairytale. Lothlorien, the land of springtime, donned her star-shaped flowers, green clouds and golden leaves to stun the class of '72 with her magical beauty. Pat Dorn and his Orchestra played to the accompaniment of a tinkling fountain and swimming goldfish. The lily-laden pools rippled and sparkled in the flickering candlelight as miniature elves peeked from behind colorful flowers and mushrooms at the flowing movement of the dancers.

Peaceful contentment shines forth from Wanda Burrier's eyes as Andrew Levy and Amy Twyford bestow a kiss upon their queen.

Making Waves, THE CLASS OF 1972

Boys' Social Chairman James Pacileo, Girls' Social Chairman Terri Amatrudo, Parliamentarian Anthony Santacroce

Secretary Wanda Burrier

Treasurer Sharon Fusco

Looking out of a window of the math wing, one may see a frolicking senior playing frisbee, enjoying the privilege of the senior Courtyard. Along with the prestige of reaching the senior year come hard work and responsibilities. Wary students are encouraged by rising scores in SAT's and Achievements. Racing through employment ads, college applications, and pamphlets, seniors search for their futures. The Class Of 1972 strives to be different, to be better by making waves: some race fifty yards for a touchdown, others break track records, and some will score outstanding points in basketball. Leadership determination, and sportsmanship have always been characteristic of these seniors. Like waves, they have affected others in a unique way, and hope that these others will continue to make waves of progress.

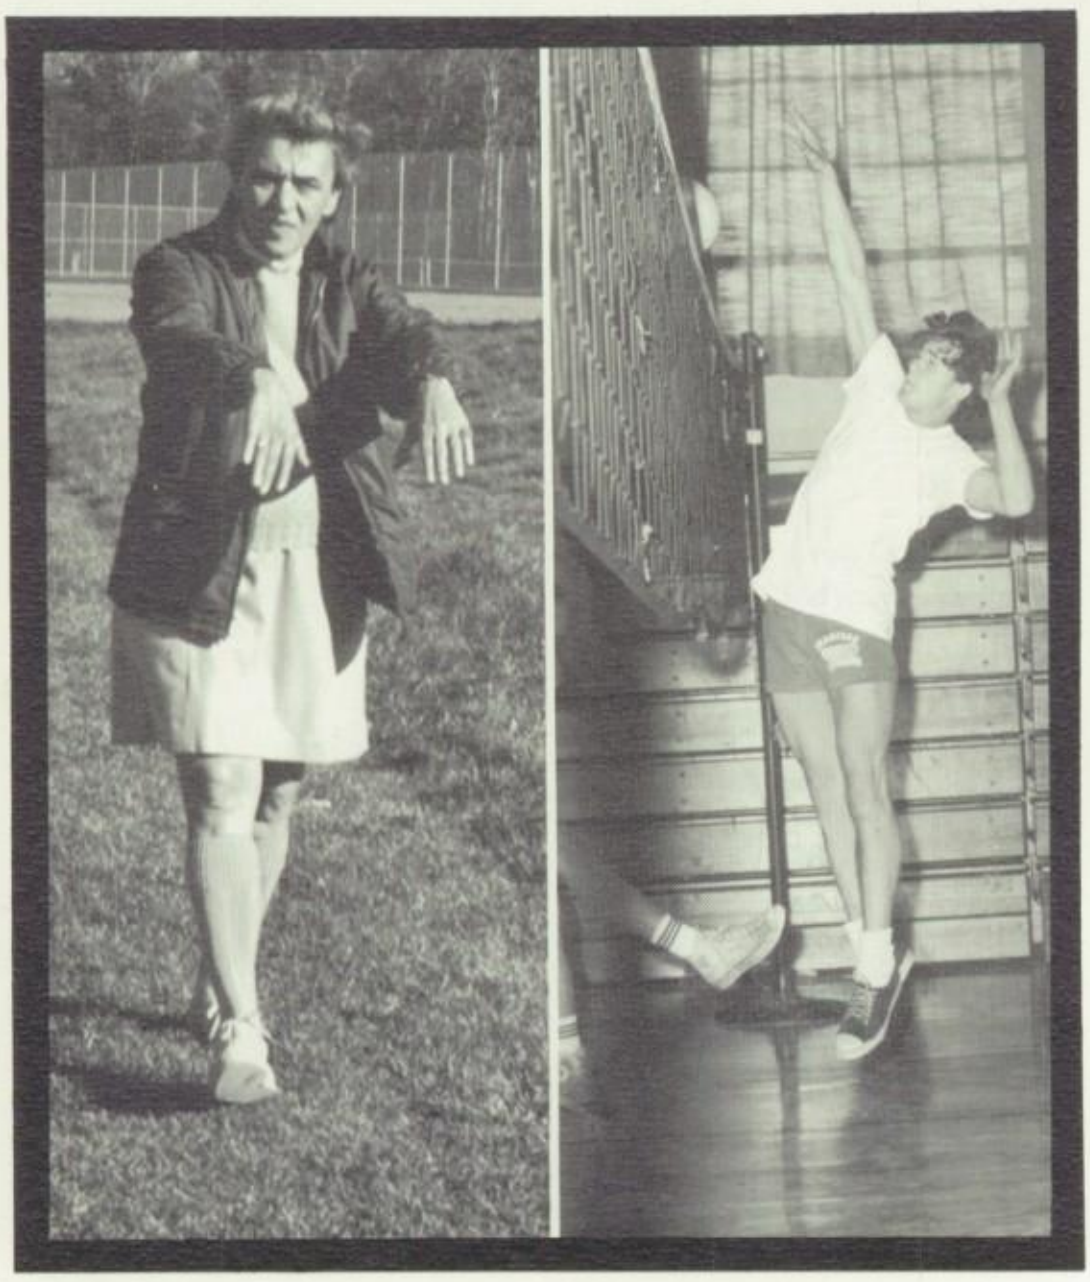
Waves Expanding Outward

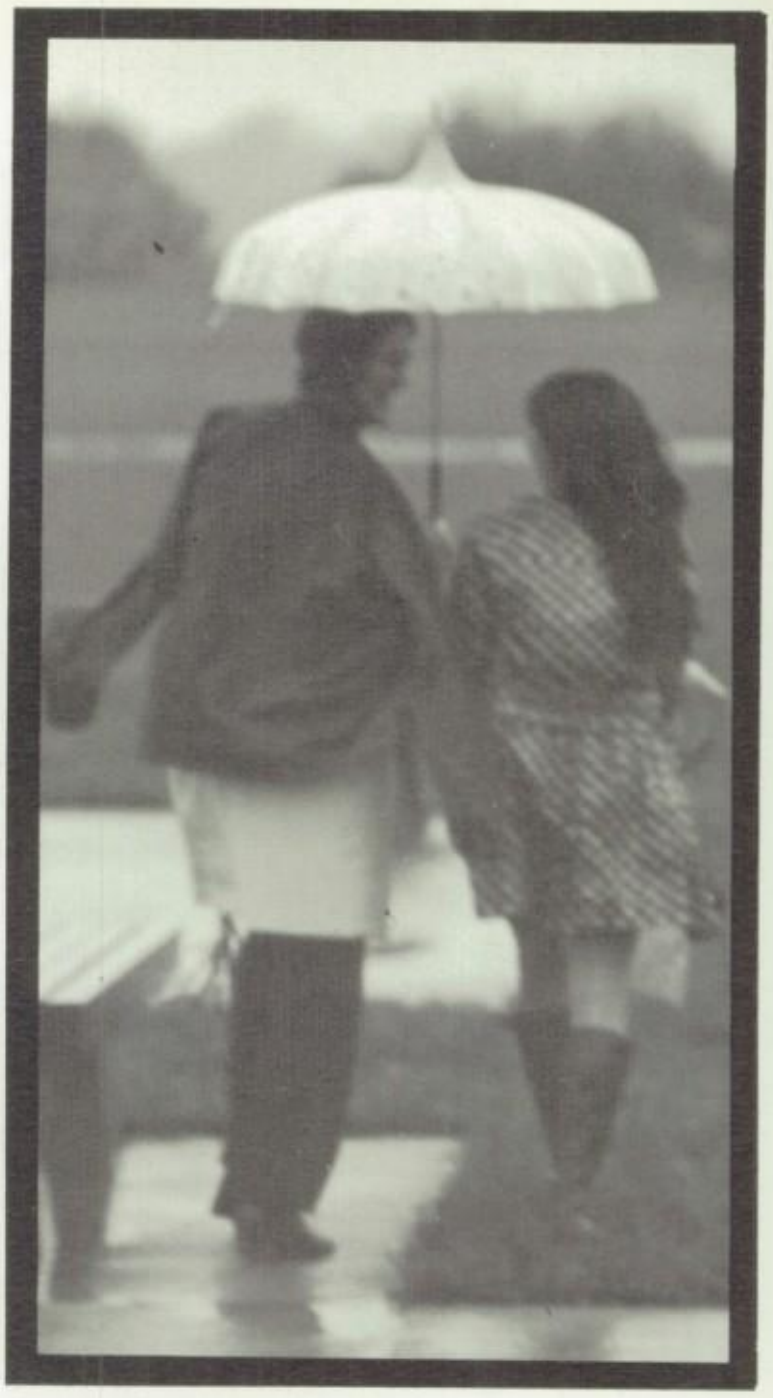
Waves progress from a pond where they are temporarily lulled as we progress from the quiescent preparation of school.

Our waves will continue, in ecstatic peaks and moribund depressions.

We proceed with them as the tide follows the moon, but as water is affected only to the extent that its quantity and character allow it, our individuality helps form the roles we take in our world.



Wave succeeds wave as moment follows moment in our lives. Our waves are a curse or a promise, as we choose to embrace them.



Directing The Momentum Of Our Waves

Mrs. Luci Patch

A wave of inspiration is a thing of power in need of direction. Mrs. Luci Patch has directed the momentum of our waves according to each individual's abilities and needs. She has merged our waves into the channel of memory which is the yearbook. The strengths and weaknesses of this book are our own, but the expertise and encouragement to see it through completion was a gift freely given by Mrs. Patch.

We also owe a debt of gratitude to sprightly Mr. Jack Brown of O'Toole Publishing Co. for his patience and ready answers to our questions.

We appreciate the cheerful and efficient cooperation of Loring Studios in so promptly providing the pictures which captured the people and events making waves.
